OSINT Report

20240910_nr02_OSINT_Report_764
Version 2

H0 – Basic Protection Level

1 Background information

The following information has been gathered from various open-source materials and publicly available reports. This section aims to provide a detailed overview of the activities, origins, and structure of the 764 group, with a focus on assisting Law Enforcement Agencies (LEAs) involved in combating Child Sexual Exploitation Material (CSEM).

The objective of this report is to offer LEAs a deeper understanding of the 764 group's tactics, influence, and links to broader criminal and extremist networks. By sharing this open-source intelligence, we seek to raise awareness and support future investigations and enforcement actions against this dangerous organization.

2 Disclaimer

2.1 Information sources

The data presented here has been gathered from independent investigations, media articles, law enforcement bulletins, and social media analyses. As a decentralized and covert network, much of the information about the 764 group is dispersed across online platforms and forums, making open-source intelligence (OSINT) a valuable tool in understanding the full scope of the group's activities.

2.2 Regulation

All the information were retrieved and processed from publicly available sources as mentioned in the art.17 - 2 of the Amended Regulation (EU) 2022/991 of the European Parliament and Council of 8th June 2022.

3 Executive Summary

This research investigates the 764 group, a decentralized criminal network primarily involved in child exploitation, cyber extortion, and acts of terrorism. Initially formed online, the group has evolved into a global network operating across multiple digital platforms [REDACTED]. The group exploits vulnerable children, coercing them into creating explicit material, self-harm, and extreme acts of violence, all of which are recorded and used for extortion or distributed among members.

Art. 4(1)(a)
first indent

764's criminal activities extend beyond child exploitation, with the group showing strong ties to satanic and accelerationist movements like the Order of Nine Angles (O9A), a group that promotes societal collapse through violent extremist acts. By targeting minors and vulnerable individuals, 764 perpetuates cycles of abuse while encouraging terrorism and destabilization of communities.

The report emphasizes the importance of this research for law enforcement agencies (LEAs), highlighting the need for coordinated efforts in investigating and dismantling 764's operations. The group's decentralized structure and covert online presence pose significant challenges to traditional law enforcement methods. However, through the use of open-source intelligence, digital forensic tools, and international collaboration, LEAs can gain critical insights into the group's activities and develop strategies to mitigate the threat.

Key individuals [REDACTED]

[REDACTED], have been central to the organization's operations. Their arrests, along with those of other prominent members, have temporarily destabilized the group, but it quickly fragmented into smaller offshoots, continuing to operate under various names (i.e. 676, CVLT, Court, Kaskar, Harm Nation, Leak Society, BSMNT and H3ll).

Art. 4(1)(a)
first indent
and 4(1)(b)

The report also covers 764's recruitment strategies, particularly its use of gaming platforms to target minors, and its ideological connections to far-right extremism, making it a complex hybrid threat that requires a multifaceted law enforcement response.

Through this research, LEAs are provided with detailed accounts of the group's origins, key individuals, and criminal methods, all aimed at supporting their efforts to protect vulnerable populations and prevent further harm.

4 Introduction

The 764 group is a decentralized criminal network primarily involved in child exploitation, cyber extortion, and acts of terrorism. Initially a small online entity, the group has evolved into a widespread and global phenomenon, operating across various digital platforms [REDACTED], and gaming environments [REDACTED]

Art. 4(1)
(a), first
indent

[REDACTED] The group is notorious for using sophisticated grooming tactics to lure vulnerable children into creating explicit material, engaging in acts of self-harm, and performing extreme acts of violence, all of which are recorded and used for further extortion or distributed among the group's members.

The group's activities extend beyond child exploitation into the realms of organized crime and domestic terrorism. The 764 group has ties to satanic and accelerationist movements, such as the Order of Nine Angles (09A), a group promoting chaos and societal collapse through violent extremist acts. By preying on minors and vulnerable individuals, the group not only perpetuates cycles of abuse but also encourages and facilitates acts of terrorism, with the ultimate goal of destabilizing communities and institutions.

This report is particularly relevant for LEAs as it highlights the multifaceted criminal activities of the 764 group, emphasizing the urgent need for coordinated efforts in investigating and dismantling such organizations. The group operates in a highly covert and decentralized manner, which presents significant challenges for traditional law enforcement methods. By leveraging open-source intelligence and digital forensic tools, LEAs can gain deeper insights into the group's operations, enabling more effective interventions.

The focus of this report is on the 764 group's involvement in organized crime, child exploitation, and terrorism. It provides LEAs with critical information on the group's origins, structure, and modus operandi, as well as detailed accounts of key incidents and individuals involved. Through a thorough understanding of the group's activities, this report aims to support LEAs in their mission to protect vulnerable populations and prevent further harm caused by this dangerous network.

The 764 group was founded by [REDACTED], a young individual from Stephenville, Texas, who, despite his age, became the central figure in the formation of this decentralized criminal network. [REDACTED] involvement with violent online content began at an early age, and by the time he was in his mid-teens, he had developed a deep fascination with extreme forms of exploitation and online manipulation. His activities escalated from simple online harassment to the more organized and insidious forms of cyber extortion and child exploitation that would later define the 764 group.

Art. 4(1)

[REDACTED] first came to the attention of local authorities in 2018, when he made terroristic threats against his school. These threats included discussions about bomb-making and school shootings, which resulted in his placement under juvenile probation. Despite these legal interventions, █████ continued to deepen his involvement in online criminal activities, eventually forming what is now known as the 764 group. The group derived its name from the first three digits of the Stephenville, Texas ZIP code 764 an indication of its local origins.

5 Origin of the 764 Group

The 764 group, created in 2021, is an online child extortion network initiated by █████, a young individual who became fascinated with violent and graphic content at a very early age. According to court documents, █████ exposure to online depictions of murder and torture began when he was just 10 years old. His introduction to these dark spaces, particularly through the online game █████ eventually led to the creation of 764. With the aid of an unidentified associate from █████ started this group, which drew inspiration from a previous █████ group known as CVLT: a community notorious for forcing children to perform sexual acts on camera, subsequently using the recordings for sextortion.

Art. 4(1)
(a), first
indent

However, unlike CVLT, 764 escalated its operations beyond sextortion. The group integrated animal torture, incest, rape, self-harm, and bestiality into their catalogue of abusive acts. Victims were coerced into performing four primary types of harm that could be recorded and shared, either on social media platforms or internally within the group. These acts included forced drug use and non-suicidal self-injury with blades or needles, asphyxiation, or burning. Some victims, particularly those already struggling with mental health issues, were encouraged to commit suicide on camera or even engage in mass shootings.

764's members also engaged in animal abuse, coercing new recruits into harming or killing their pets or other animals. Sextortion and the distribution of CSAM became central to the group's operations, with victims groomed to share intimate images. These images were then weaponized in elaborate blackmail schemes designed to maintain control over victims. If they resisted further exploitation, the victims were threatened with exposure through LoreBooks, dossiers filled with explicit content intended to be shared with their friends and family.

5.1 The Fall and Fragmentation of 764

The arrests of key members █████, and several others significantly disrupted the 764 group. Following █████ arrest, internal conflicts and doxxing¹ of members destabilized the group, ultimately leading to what was described as its official dissolution. Despite this, 764 quickly fragmented into several offshoots, including 676, CVLT, Court, Kaskar, Harm Nation, Leak Society, and H3ll. While these groups adopted different names, their operational methods and core objectives remained the same, continuing the pattern of abuse and exploitation established by the original 764 group.

Art. 4(1)

The decentralization of 764 has made it particularly difficult for law enforcement agencies to contain the group's activities. Even though the group has fragmented, these various factions remain connected by their shared aesthetic signifiers, operational tactics, and violent objectives.

5.1.1 Recruitment and Victimization through Online Communities

764 primarily recruits its members and victimizers through online communities dedicated to obscene material, such as forums focused on gore, mass shootings, or violent extremism. The group's primary recruitment channels are embedded within gaming spaces, particularly on platforms [REDACTED], where a large portion of the user base consists of young players. These gaming platforms serve as entry points, where perpetrators establish contact with victims, luring them into private spaces [REDACTED]. From there, grooming and sextortion unfold.

[REDACTED] popularity with 764 stems from its ease of server creation and its ability to host text, voice, and video communication, making it an ideal platform for the group's exploitative activities. Pre-existing communities focused on self-harm, gore, or extremist ideologies provide fertile ground for recruiting both future abusers and victims. [REDACTED]

Art. 4(1)
(a) first

764 deliberately seeks out vulnerable individuals in online communities, targeting LGBTQ+ youth, racial minorities, and those suffering from mental illness. These individuals, often marginalized or socially isolated, are more susceptible to manipulation and less likely to seek help. According to chat logs reviewed during the investigations, many members who became abusers within 764 were once victims themselves. The trauma cycle within 764 is essential to the group's preservation, as victims, rather than escaping, often become further embedded in the community, perpetuating the abuse they experienced onto others.

5.2 Ideological Foundations and Links to Far-Right Extremism

764's operations have significant ideological intersections with the Order of Nine Angles (O9A), a neo-Nazi, Satanist accelerationist group advocating for the collapse of modern civilization. O9A promotes violence, sexual exploitation, and child abuse as a means of undermining societal values. Like O9A, 764 encourages illegal, immoral acts such as CSAM distribution, sexual violence, and animal abuse, which they view as part of their larger accelerationist goals.

Several prominent members of 764 have exhibited connections to O9A's esoteric ideologies. For example, [REDACTED], a known 764 associate, was found to possess not only child exploitation material but also O9A literature and Nazi imagery. [REDACTED] social media history revealed a fascination with mass violence, animal cruelty, and the sexual abuse of children, aligning him ideologically with O9A's core tenets.

(b)

Other members, such as [REDACTED], were involved in far-right extremist activities. [REDACTED] was arrested in 2022 for possessing child pornography, but his connections to violent, racially motivated ideologies and attempts to produce illegal firearms (ghost guns) reveal the deeper ideological and operational overlap between 764 and the far-right extremist milieu.

6 Criminal activities and methods

The 764 group engages in a wide range of criminal activities, with child exploitation, grooming, and extortion forming the core of its operations. From its inception, the group has focused on preying on vulnerable individuals, particularly minors, using sophisticated methods of psychological manipulation and cybercrime to coerce them into performing explicit acts. Over time, these criminal activities have evolved to include links to far-right extremist groups like the O9A and other satanic/accelerationist networks, amplifying the group's potential for harm and violence. The decentralized structure of the 764 group allows it to operate across multiple online platforms, making it difficult to track and dismantle.

6.1 Child Exploitation, Grooming, and Extortion Methods

The primary criminal activities of the 764 group centre around child exploitation. Group members target children and teenagers on social media platforms, gaming forums, and messaging apps, often starting with casual interactions before escalating to predatory behaviour. Once trust is gained, these victims are coerced into sharing explicit content or performing harmful acts, usually under threats of blackmail. Typical extortion tactics include threatening to share the victim's explicit content with their family, friends, or online communities unless they comply with further demands.

The group is notorious for using a tactic called "fansigning," where victims are forced to carve symbols, names, or numbers into their skin as a show of ownership by the group. In more extreme cases, victims are ordered to harm or even kill their pets, commit acts of self-harm, or attempt suicide, all of which are filmed and shared with the group for sadistic entertainment and further extortion. The psychological toll on the victims is immense, with many subjected to ongoing threats, manipulation, and abuse even after complying with the group's demands.

In some instances, the 764 group also engages in swatting: making false reports to authorities about criminal activities in the victim's home in order to provoke a violent law enforcement response, further terrorizing the individual. This blend of psychological abuse, cybercrime, and physical harm is a hallmark of the group's methods.

6.2 Connections to the Order of Nine Angles and Accelerationist Groups

The 764 group is deeply entwined with satanic and accelerationist ideologies, particularly through its connections to the 09A, a Neo-Nazi group known for promoting violent extremism and societal collapse. The 09A has a long history of encouraging violence, chaos, and disorder as part of its far-right agenda, and these ideas have found fertile ground within the 764 network.

Members of the 764 group frequently incorporate 09A's satanic rituals and symbols into their activities, using the guise of occultism to further exploit their victims. This connection to satanic beliefs not only adds a psychological element to their manipulation tactics but also serves as a method of desensitization, making both victims and group members more susceptible to committing extreme acts of violence and cruelty. The group has been documented using rituals, symbols, and language associated with 09A to create a sense of fear and control over their victims.

In addition to the 09A, the 764 group is also associated with accelerationist groups, which advocate for the collapse of modern society through acts of terror, chaos, and violence. These groups use the internet to spread ideologies that inspire mass shootings, bombings, and other acts of terrorism. The 764 group's ability to groom and radicalize individuals—particularly vulnerable young people—makes them a powerful recruiting ground for accelerationist movements. By combining child exploitation with extremist ideologies, the group increases its reach and influence, making it a serious threat not just to individuals but to broader society.

6.3 Operation on Online Platforms

The 764 group operates across a wide range of digital platforms, exploiting the anonymity and connectivity of the internet to expand its activities globally. The group's primary method of communication and recruitment takes place on popular platforms [REDACTED]

By constantly shifting their activities between different digital spaces and using encrypted communication channels, the 764 group remains elusive and continues to expand its influence and reach.

7 Notable Individuals and Incidents

The 764 group's notoriety has been shaped by the involvement of key individuals whose criminal activities and personal histories have garnered widespread attention. Among the most significant figures are [REDACTED], whose disturbing role in child exploitation and family tragedy brought renewed focus on the group's operations. Their actions, alongside key incidents, have triggered law enforcement responses at both national and international levels, drawing attention to the complex and decentralized nature of the group's criminal activities.

Significant Incidents and Law Enforcement Response

The FBI and other law enforcement agencies became increasingly involved in investigating the 764 group after these high-profile incidents. As early as 2021, [REDACTED] [REDACTED] the FBI began issuing public warnings about the dangers of online child exploitation networks like the 764 group. These warnings, along with official statements about the group's involvement in the distribution of CSAM and the promotion of violent extremism, emphasized the group's growing influence and the challenges law enforcement faced in dismantling its decentralized structure.

The tragic death [REDACTED] and the subsequent arrest of [REDACTED] marked a critical turning point in the investigation. Law enforcement agencies, particularly the FBI, intensified their efforts to track the group's activities and identify its members. Public safety alerts were issued to raise awareness of the group's operations, particularly its use of gaming platforms and social media to groom and exploit minors.

Art.
4(1)(b)

On 12 September 2023, the FBI released the public service announcement (PSA) Alert Number I-091223-PSA³ warning parents about the group's tactics and the dangers it posed to children using online platforms. The PSA highlighted the group's use of encrypted messaging apps and gaming platforms to lure victims, urging parents and guardians to monitor their children's online activities more closely.

8 Law Enforcement Efforts

The 764 group's criminal activities, particularly its involvement in child exploitation, extortion, and ties to extremist ideologies, have prompted significant law enforcement efforts both in Europe and internationally. As the group's decentralized structure and online presence make it difficult to track and dismantle, LEAs have had to adapt their strategies. This section highlights the ongoing operations, the challenges faced, and the collaborative efforts required to combat this dangerous network.

8.1 Current LEA Operations Against the Group

Law enforcement operations targeting the 764 group have been underway since the group's criminal activities first came to light, [REDACTED]. These operations include:

[REDACTED]

Public Awareness Campaigns: LEAs have also launched public awareness initiatives to educate parents, children, and educators about the risks of online exploitation. Europol, the National Center for Missing & Exploited Children (NCMEC), have issued multiple advisories, urging parents to monitor their children's online activities more closely and report suspicious behaviour to law enforcement.

8.3 Collaborations Between Different Agencies

Due to the complex nature of the 764 group's operations, effective law enforcement efforts have required collaboration between multiple agencies.

Cooperation: Europol and Operational Partners have been working closely with international law enforcement bodies to share intelligence and coordinate investigations. This cooperation is essential given the group's global reach and the involvement of individuals across various countries. Joint operations have led to the arrest of key members in countries outside Europe, as international law enforcement agencies collaborate to shut down the group's cells.

National Center for Missing & Exploited Children (NCMEC): NCMEC plays a crucial role in assisting law enforcement by providing tips, reports, and resources related to child exploitation. Through the CyberTipline, NCMEC collects and processes reports of suspected child exploitation, working in tandem with local, state, and federal law enforcement agencies to identify and track down offenders associated with the 764 group.

International Legal Frameworks: Treaties such as the Budapest Convention on Cybercrime facilitate international cooperation in addressing cybercrimes like those committed by the 764 group. These frameworks allow law enforcement agencies from different countries to share information, coordinate investigations, and prosecute criminals who operate across borders. By utilizing such frameworks, agencies can pursue offenders even when they operate from countries with limited extradition agreements.

Private Sector Collaboration: Law enforcement agencies have also been partnering with tech companies, internet service providers, and social media platforms to combat the group's activities. [REDACTED]

[REDACTED]. These partnerships are crucial in preventing the spread of exploitation material and identifying perpetrators.

8.4.4 Community Education and Awareness Campaigns

Parent and child education programs: Given the 764 group's tactics of targeting minors through popular online platforms, parents and educators need to be equipped with knowledge about online safety. LEAs can lead or collaborate with non-governmental organizations (NGOs) to develop workshops and campaigns that focus on identifying red flags in online interactions, how to report suspicious activity, and how to protect children from exploitation.

Collaboration with schools and community canters: LEAs should partner with schools to introduce digital safety courses for both students and educators. This could include how to recognize grooming behaviours, avoiding risky interactions, and how to report them to authorities.

Victim support networks: For communities affected by the 764 group, creating robust victim support networks that offer psychological assistance, legal aid, and rehabilitation services is crucial. LEAs should work with NGOs and mental health professionals to provide resources to victims of online exploitation, ensuring they receive proper care and protection.
